

The Most Important Priority

By Joanne Corby, MA, MPA

Our priorities define who we are.
They are the values that characterize our borders.
At times they can get lost and out of order.
Whenever reorganization comes to call
whether we've created it or it's from an unexpected fall,
finding balance will put our priorities back on track
no matter how far they are out of whack.

To some, priorities might be an occupation.
Just be sure to always include a vacation.
If you ask a person about their priorities
they would have to stop and think because having one isn't for most
its all about finding priority's link.

Priorities don't just belong to some
and no one can have only one.
They never stay the same and most don't notice when they have changed.

There is one thing for sure
that is common to us all.
It is easy to become full of malice
whenever our priorities are off balance.
So take the time to look within
and enjoy your family and friends.
For one day will come when
we are no longer defined,
it will all be about the relationships we leave behind.
